

FCC,

In your attempt to make more LPFM stations available, you are denying already existing stations their ability to serve the public good. If these stations are rejected for renewal of their current frequency, they should be granted compatible frequency in their market area. To simply bump off a viable and valuable station without recourse is a denial of the right of due process. If the government is able to selectively deny a license simply by being a repeater network, who is to stop them from denying license by virtue of content? What is next, denying license for lack of political correctness? This is a clear attempt to prop up unsuccessful and unprofessional fringe radio stations at the expense of popular and successful networks. Just because a station is small should not earn it special treatment by the government nor should it punish a network for being large and successful. This constitutes a blatant violation of equal protection under the law.
